Honmachi, with both sides of its main street lined with Minoyaki pottery and porcelain wholesalers, developed as a commercial center for Tajimi City from the Meiji period to the early Showa period. This street was traveled by many horse-drawn wagons and large hand-drawn carts to deliver Minoyaki products across the nation.

drawn wagons and large hand-drawn carts to deliver Minoyaki products across the nation.

After the railroad from Tajimi to Nagoya opened in 1900, pottery and porcelain dealers with their large bags packed with Minoyaki product samples traveled the country selling their products. Thanks to their efforts, the market share of Minoyaki expanded to its current position. Honmachi still has old warehouses and merchant houses with vestiges of those days and is using them to revitalize the community.
